BACHELOR OF BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION in International Business

About the Program

A globalized world makes international business a most promising program of study, with potentially unlimited career opportunities. This is especially the case within the developing and emerging economies of the ASEAN Economic Community. Bangkok is at the heart of ASEAN, with a mix of Asian cultures literally right before you. If you have come to learn the nuances of Asian business practice, this is the place.

In St Theresa's International Business community, you are not only signing up to learn, you are signing up to engage.

It is a well-crafted program that fulfills professional needs and addresses today's challenges for career opportunities at home and overseas, in any type of business, whether it be a self-employed activity, a family business, a job at a small or medium-sized enterprise, or at a multinational company.

What You Will Learn

The international business program's aim is quite simple: to advance understanding of business in the competitive global economy through teaching students core business concepts at international standards. The program is interdepartmental, meaning courses are distributed over several functional areas highlighting crucial aspects of business that are in demand by global industries.

At St Theresa's we believe that all learning begins with an immersion in real world problems and the International Business program expects you to collaborate and exchange ideas with your classmates which, in turn, enable you to find solutions to problems. Only through these interactions can you develop core business communication, negotiation, and management skills.

To enroll here means to commit yourself to becoming an active participant in a community of learners. In St Theresa's International Business community, you are not only signing up to learn, you are signing up to engage.
